NextGen Healthcare Launches COVID-19 Blog Resource

What:

NextGen Healthcare, Inc. has launched a new blog resource called NextGen® Daily Advisor to help healthcare organizations better understand rapidly evolving issues related to the COVID-19 pandemic such as the impact to provider practices, regulatory guidelines and clinical trials. The NextGen® Daily Advisor will also provide a forum for sharing insights, ideas and client experiences related to the current scientific and healthcare industry response to the pandemic. As the Coronavirus crisis unfolds, we recognize that our clients have become focused on mounting an effective, safe and sustainable response to this new unprecedented challenge. We are similarly focused here at NextGen Healthcare.

Going forward, our multidisciplinary team of health care experts will partner with clients to offer advisory services, assisting our clients with the strategic and operational challenges they face as they work to recover from this crisis and begin to address their future imperatives.

Why:

The impact of COVID-19 is affecting hospital systems, community health clinics, ambulatory care providers, group practices and private practices differently, and can be overwhelming. The NextGen® Daily Advisor is a resource that arms providers, patients and the general public with practical information to simplify the issues and explain how to address challenges by a team of renowned healthcare professionals.

Who:

A team of five healthcare professionals from NextGen Healthcare offer insights and expertise, including:

- Dr. Betty Rabinowitz, Chief Medical Officer
- Graham Brown, Senior Vice President
- Dr. Martin Lustick, Senior Vice President
- Chris Emper, Government Affairs Advisor
- Cherie Holmes-Henry, Vice President, Government & Industry Affairs, and Chair of EHRA

The panel of experts are also available for press interviews and can provide quotes.
